I need to call a function with a callback that contains a void *pointer. The function should not know or care that the pointer is actually a pointer to the end of a vector, and should pass the pointer to a callback function. The callback should store the pointer in its argument and return an integer. Right now I am trying to play with &C_Vector.back. A: You can just use reinterpret_cast to convert the void * to a void *. void * vptr; ... void * ptr = &C_Vector.back; int (*callback)(int, void *) = reinterpret_cast(ptr); Q: Rails 3 adding optional parameters to an existing route I've got the following route in my routes.rb file map.coverPage 'views/photos', :controller => 'photos', :action => 'cover' which I want to add an optional parameter :album_id to: map.coverPage 'views/photos', :controller => 'photos', :action => 'cover', :album_id => album_id When I do that it seems to just concatenate the two together How can I do this without editing the routes.rb?
